The original, acerbic and mischievous "Lee" was a dying real estate agent, tucked into a wheelchair, and faced with impending foreclosure by a bank. An all-new reality show on NetStar was his last hope to save his home and financial life. Is that not the definition of a private diary? I'm glad to see it return to the Blogberry forum, where it belongs. I loved the humor, the sarcasm and the high-quality satire. I've made a few contributions, while resisting the temptation to post a pic of my own. But I have to admit, Lee, you got me, and you made me laugh so hard that my tears had to flow. I look forward to more from you. Ok, OK, before you turn me into a Posing Rat, I have to tell you that I actually learned something from your site. I'd read a lot, always looking for the next piece to add to my library. You're right, I can't get enough of that bassooned look-up. How about you? 1 comment: It is a new site, but it is on a roll.And to the caller of Cabeza de Vaca, Well I did read the book, but I've only gotten to about the third chapter. And yes I am an RWA. About Me Author and artist Rene Thomas is a native of the Ozarks, who spent much of his youth roaming the woods and fields of southeastern Missouri. Thomas has published many short stories over the years, and compiled many of them into his first two collections, Cowboy Wit and A Town Called Cowtown. He has written two historical westerns set in 19th century Missouri. Thomas retired from selling real estate to become a full-time writer. He has lived in just about every major U.S. city, but he still dreams of those Ozark hills. Thomas' best-known book, The League of Fools, a collection of his shorts and unpublished essays, appeared in 2002. Thomas, who lived in California before the age of 50 3ef4e8ef8d
