The main and 2ndary database contain less sensitive data than the third. If an SQL error occurs in the 3rd database, and the user is NOT identified with the 3rd database, what can I do to keep data in the 2ndary database? A: If you cannot fix the problem which caused the SQL query to fail, you can prevent the query being executed on the 3rd database: select * from db3 where uid=1; This will cause the query to fail because uid is not in the 3rd database, and nothing will be inserted into the 2ndary database. Development of an artificial intelligence tool to predict the severity of congenital diaphragmatic hernia and to identify high risk infants for surgical intervention. Several studies showed that significant reduction in mortality rates and favorable short-term outcomes in neonates with congenital diaphragmatic hernia (CDH) are likely achievable with early referral and optimal timing of delivery. However, it is difficult to identify which CDH infants with severe respiratory failure will develop persistent respiratory failure and improve survival rates following a successful operation. We therefore developed a novel artificial intelligence (AI) system to automatically predict the severity of CDH and identify high risk infants who would benefit from surgical interventions. A total of 1,000 CDH cases were retrieved from the Taiwan CDH Registry database between January 2010 and December 2012. A subset of 150 cases with more than 3 months follow-up was used to develop the CDH severity
