Thank you For Reading and Download.Defects in the glycosylation of antibodies are associated with a number of clinical conditions including the hyper- or hypo-gammaglobulinemia associated with certain types of leukemia. We have identified the first metabolic defect in B cells which results in their inability to properly glycosylate antibodies. We have shown that the membrane-bound enzyme UDP-N-acetylglucosamine:polypeptide N-acetylglucosaminyltransferase III (GnTIII), which catalyzes the terminal step of the de- novo complex N-linked glycosylation pathway, is missing in patients with an immunodeficiency disease which is characterized by defective antibody production, IgA deficiency. Most patients with this disease have no evidence of cellular immunodeficiency, but have an impaired ability to respond to T-independent antigens. The lack of GnTIII in B cells is due to genetic disruption of the gene encoding GnTIII. This enzyme is active in other cell types including B cells in mice. Experiments are proposed in this application to characterize the abnormalities associated with the disrupted gene and to identify the enzyme in other cell types such as T cells
