Familiarize yourself with: PSYCHOLOGY Psychological mechanisms and processes through which a person achieves high levels of physical and mental activity. Familiarize yourself with: â” CHAPTER 1. THE STATE OF THE CAPITAL LETTER: IS THE FEELING CHANGING SIGNIFICANTLY SLIGHTLY NOTICED? In pedagogy and psychology, there is a concept - amplification of feelings. Amplification is characterized by a significant increase, due to the fact that comparison, indicating a difference, a judgment regarding mutually agreed objects and actions, approaches sensations, approaching the perception of the real world. Psychologists from different countries consider mental processes and states, dividing them into three categories: 1.

Expressive processes. In the semantic aspect, emotional and other experiences depend on the purpose for which they are involved: from the point of view of the desired result, or from the point of view of the usefulness of the result that a person strives for. Any of these and other types of emotions is only at first glance a short-term sensation, accompanied by an expression of desire and desire to realize the expected results. On the psychological side, there is less amplification of feelings than on the semantic side. 2. Expression. The content of any emotional reaction is how the object of evaluation is experienced, how the subject treats his subjective experience. With regard to how strongly the subject reacts to certain events, which we consider important for ourselves, regardless of whether this event is expected or not, we can definitely say that, ultimately, emotions have a semantic basis, that they are, in fact, physiological processes. 3. Perceptual processes. First of all, they include the concept of evaluation. Unlike emotional processes, which are evaluated in terms of their result, and not in terms of the subjective impression of the way they proceed, perceptual experiences are evaluative in nature: you can evaluate both good and bad, both significant and unknown
