From: _____ Users mailing list Users@chromium.org of the single-dose and multiple-dose prodrug of 5-fluorouracil, 5'-O-tert-butyl-2'-fluoro-5-fluorouridine (B2UFA). A single oral dose (400 mg) and multiple oral doses (200 mg qd x 10) of 5'-O-tert-butyl-2'-fluoro-5-fluorouridine (B2UFA) were given to a single patient with advanced gastrointestinal cancer. Plasma concentrations of B2UFA and 5-fluorouracil (FU) were determined by HPLC. The B2UFA was rapidly converted to FU in plasma. The elimination half-life of B2UFA was less than 2.2 hr, and the apparent volume of distribution was 8.0 +/- 1.3 l/kg. There was a 1:1 ratio between the concentrations of FU and the total fluorine in plasma, demonstrating that the B2UFA is a prodrug of FU. However, the bioavailability of B2UFA was extremely low. When the daily dose was increased 10-fold, the mean FU concentration in plasma was not significantly changed, whereas the mean B2UFA concentration was about 4-fold higher than the mean B2UFA concentration when the daily dose was increased 10-fold. The bioavailability of B2UFA after multiple doses was much lower than that after a single dose. These results suggest that the low bioavailability of B2UFA is due to both gastrointestinal and hepatic first-pass effects.A pilot study of psychiatric symptoms and psychological functioning in nonacutely ill family members of patients with schizophrenia. Psychiatric symptoms and psychological functioning were evaluated in 70 nonacutely ill relatives of patients with schizophrenia (47 women and 23 men, with a mean age of 34.8 years) and 70 controls (49 women and 21 men, with a mean age of 34.9 years) by using structured diagnostic interviews, self-report questionnaires, and a structured interview schedule. Compared with controls, nonacutely ill relatives had significantly more symptoms of depression and alcohol/substance abuse and lower self-esteem, but these differences were no longer significant when schizophrenia patients were included as a group. Nonacutely ill relatives also had higher somatization than did controls. The nonacutely ill relatives had a higher mean total SCL-
