It is not known whether auditory dysfunction results from a change in the structure of the ears or from abnormal development of the auditory system. The purpose of this study was to examine possible age-related changes of the inner ear at the histological level. Human ears were obtained from individuals of known age, fixed in 10% formalin, decalcified, embedded in paraffin, sectioned, and stained for light and electron microscopy. The inner ears were composed of the membranous labyrinth of the vestibular system and the cochlea. The membranous labyrinth consisted of the utricle, saccule, and semicircular canals and contained the vestibular apparatus, vestibular nerve, and cupulae. The cochlea consisted of the spiral ganglion, organ of Corti, Rosenthal's canal, spiral ligament, spiral limbus, spiral lamina, and tectorial membrane and contained the spiral ganglion nerve and spiral ganglion lamina. The results of the study showed that the membranous labyrinth of the vestibular system remained unchanged with age, but the structure of the cochlea was altered by degeneration of the spiral ligament.
