Q: If $f, g \in \mathbb{R}$ and $g > 0$, then $f \leq \frac{1}{g} \int_0^{\infty} f^{1/g} \mathrm{d}x$

Let $f, g \in \mathbb{R}$ and $g > 0$. Prove that $f \leq \frac{1}{g} \int_0^{\infty} f^{1/g} \mathrm{d}x$. My Proof: 0

$$\int_0^{\infty} f^{1/g} dx \leq$$

So we get: $f \leq \frac{1}{g}$

Is this correct? A: If f is non-negative, we have:

$$\int_0^{\infty} f^{1/g} dx = \frac{1}{g} \int_0^{\infty} f^{1/(g-1)} dx \leq \frac{1}{g}$$

and by dividing both sides by

$\int_0^{\infty} f dx$ you get:

$$\frac{\int_0^{\infty} f^{1/g} dx}{\int_0^{\infty} f dx} \leq \frac{1}{g}$$
 so $f \leq \int_0^{\infty}$

OA is characterized by cartilage degeneration and inflammation in the joint (Valdes et al. (2009) J Clin Invest Vol 119: 2698-705). Although OA can occur at any joint, it is most common in the knee, followed by the hip and the hand/wrist. As knee OA progresses, swelling and loss of cartilage and joint space may occur, and as the disease progresses, the joints become stiff. Knee OA is highly correlated with structural changes in the menisci and cartilage (Damas et al. (1998) Clin Orthop Relat Res Vol 348: 220-8). Symptoms may include pain and swelling of the knee, impaired activities of daily living, reduced joint motion, and
