Digital contents such as music and video are susceptible to unauthorized use such as copying and/or distributing. As a result, a number of digital content protection systems have been developed. One of these is known as the Content Protection for Recordable Media (CPRM). The CPRM is developed and maintained by the Digital Transmission Licensing Association (DTLA), an organization which represents the owners of recordable media. The CPRM consists of three key elements: the license manager (LM), the secret key distributor (SKD), and the content. The LM receives an encrypted version of the license from the content provider and, using a secret key provided by the SKD, decrypts the license to produce a license key (i.e., a decrypted version of the license). The LM then, using the license key, authenticates the content to determine whether or not the content is being used in violation of the license. The LM also controls the number of times a license can be used. This license is unique to the content to be licensed and is used only to determine the number of times the license can be used. Once the license is acquired and has been validated, the SKD distributes secret keys to licensees. The licensees, in turn, use these keys to produce the same license key that the LM produces. Each licensee is issued a unique key to secure this license key. The security of the CPRM is predicated on the principle that the SK 77a5ca646e

April 11, 2010 "Bob Woodward tells how he went behind the scenes to get this bestselling book on Obama's personal life in the White House. Woodward turned to a close confidant: a Republican lawyer who was in charge of vetting and advising the president, and was making secret files. Every day, he says, he found more and more reasons to go easy on Obama." Source: NPR April 10, 2010 "This will be the first time the all-black Navy SEAL team will deploy. Some are ready to fight, others say they are just here for training. Tucked away in the hills of Nevada, the team was being trained to take out terrorists in the Middle East." Source: NBC April 09, 2010 "An Illinois congressman says the new law will force him to decide whether or not to turn in his guns. Rep. Bobby Rush says his Second Amendment rights will be infringed
