Adenoid cystic carcinoma is one of the most common malignant tumors of the salivary glands. The purpose of this study was to clarify the clinical characteristics and local recurrence patterns of maxillary adenoid cystic carcinoma. Between 1988 and 2010, 20 patients with maxillary adenoid cystic carcinoma were treated with surgical resection alone in a single institution. Eight patients (40%) had early-stage (T1/T2) tumors, and 12 patients (60%) had advanced-stage (T3/T4) tumors. All patients had undergone, to date, local resection, which had been followed by adjuvant radiotherapy. The 5-year disease-specific survival rate was 87.5%, and the local recurrence rate was 4% (1/25). The local recurrence rate was significantly lower in early-stage patients (0%) than in advanced-stage patients (25.0%; P The establishment and breakdown of a synthetic geniculate afferent pathway in the deafferented lateral geniculate nucleus of the cat. 1. Deafferentation of the lateral geniculate nucleus (LGN) was induced in adult cats by sectioning the optic nerves just behind the optic chiasma. The effect of the section was to deprive the LGN of visual information that normally arrives from the retina via optic nerve fibers. 2. Ten days after nerve sectioning, orchidectomies were performed in the anteroventral quadrant of the contralateral visual cortex 9df0af710a
