Categories : OS : WinXP+WinXpHeadlines from the Canadian Press Canada says it will respond to U.S. sanctions announced by Donald Trump OTTAWA — The Canadian government said Wednesday it will respond to U.S. sanctions announced by Donald Trump targeting steel and aluminum imports, but remained noncommittal on whether it would impose retaliatory measures. “We appreciate the action on steel and aluminum announced by the U.S. Administration,” Global Affairs Minister Chrystia Freeland said in a statement. “We will continue to consult with our U.S. partners on the extent and potential impacts of any countermeasures that the U.S. may consider.” The U.S. restrictions, announced just before Christmas, are aimed at checking the surge in steel and aluminum imports into the United States that many believe are threatening its national security. The Trump administration cited national security as its reason for the measures. The White House said on Monday it will impose 25 per cent tariffs on steel and 10 per cent on aluminum imports from all countries but exempted the U.S. allies of Canada and Mexico, which is raising fears that the tariffs will cause a backlash in Canada. Canada says Trump can't simply
