Replace the default value that you find and save the file. I think that should work for you. The present invention generally relates to production of pellets, and more particularly to production of pellets containing pyrolytic carbon. Pellets containing pyrolytic carbon for use in high temperature applications are well known in the art. Typical applications for such pellets include the production of substrate for articles of manufacture, particularly for rocket, jet, and satellite applications. The pellets preferably contain a metal or metal alloy as the substrate. Pellets containing pyrolytic carbon often include a seed layer of a metal or metal alloy on the surface of the pyrolytic carbon. The seed layer acts as a nucleating agent during the formation of the pyrolytic carbon, ensuring a uniform grain structure during pyrolytic carbon formation. In typical applications, the pyrolytic carbon is formed by a pyrolytic carbon or a carbonaceous torch, which preferably includes a rarifying gas to enhance a uniform grain structure. The seed layer and the pyrolytic carbon are preferably formed in separate furnaces, preferably in separate chambers in the same furnace. This is most typically done by thermally coating the seed metal on the particle surface. However, as the particle size of the substrate is increasingly reduced, the art has challenged the ability to simultaneously form the pyrolytic carbon and the seed metal layer. The seed metal commonly forms on only a portion of the substrate particle surface. A problem with this method arises in that the seed metal and the pyrolytic carbon are formed simultaneously, and thus the pyrolytic carbon does not necessarily adhere to the seed metal in the desired manner. Indeed, from a general standpoint, it is believed that the pyrolytic carbon does not adhere well to the seed metal, because the seed metal does not become liquid and wet out the pyrolytic carbon. As a result, the pyrolytic carbon 82138339de
