1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an electrolytic capacitor using an activated carbon which is excellent in sintering resistance and anodizing property.

2. Related Background Art Conventionally, as an electrolytic capacitor using an activated carbon as a capacitor element, there are known a lead type capacitor comprising a valve-acting metal such as aluminum, an anode made of an activated carbon impregnated with a manganese nitrate solution and an electrolyte and a capacitor comprising a valve-acting metal such as aluminum, a cathode obtained by impregnating an activated carbon with an organic manganese electrolyte and a separator having a thickness of 0.1 to 0.5 mm. In a capacitor using an activated carbon as a capacitor element, the activated carbon is impregnated with a manganese salt such as manganese nitrate or manganese chloride and is anodized to be used as a cathode. In a capacitor using an activated carbon as a capacitor element, when the size of the capacitor is increased, the surface area of the activated carbon is increased, but the impregnated amount of a manganese salt is decreased. As a result, the electric capacity is lowered and the leakage current is increased. When the size of the capacitor is increased, the value of the leakage current is further increased. On the other hand, there is known a method of improving the leakage current by sintering the cathode. In this method, by sintering the activated carbon at a temperature of 500.degree. C. or higher, the particle diameter of the activated carbon is increased. However, in a capacitor using a conventional activated carbon as a capacitor element, as described above, the capacitor is liable to a problem that the electric capacity is lowered due to the increase in the leakage current or the problem
