To explore the effects of human kidney epithelial cells (HKECs) on renal cell carcinoma (RCC) progression. HKECs and several RCC cell lines were used to investigate their effects on RCC tumor growth and angiogenesis in nude mice and in vitro cell growth and tumorigenicity in nude mice. The roles of the unfolded protein response (UPR) and β -catenin, which is a key protein in the canonical Wnt/ β -catenin pathway, in HKEC-mediated RCC cell growth were investigated. Intratumoral injection of HKECs significantly promoted tumor growth and angiogenesis in an RCC mouse model. HKEC-mediated tumor growth was inhibited by either knockdown of β -catenin, glycogen synthase kinase-3, or STF-083010, an UPR inducer. HKEC injection significantly increased the tumorigenicity of RCC cells in nude mice and induced the expression of XBP1. XBP1 is related to the UPR in RCC cells and has a positive feedback on Wnt/ β -catenin signaling by enhancing the stability of β -catenin. HKEC injection induced the expression of β -catenin and XBP1 in RCC xenograft tissues. Our results suggest that HKECs could play an important role in RCC progression and that UPR and β -catenin signaling are involved in the HKEC-mediated RCC tumorigenicity.-- tests for expr.lua package.path = package.path..";src/luavm" require "lua/expr/expr" function test() local s = "(" ..
