We studied the influence of acute administration of 3-hydroxykynurenine (3-HK) on the response of mouse gastric fundus strips to carbachol and electrical field stimulation. The strips were cut in a longitudinal direction and attached to an isometric transducer. 3-HK increased the force of contraction in a dose-dependent manner. The stimulatory effect of 3-HK on the contractile response to carbachol and electrical field stimulation was abolished by pretreatment with either mepyramine (H1 antagonist) or methysergide (5-HT antagonist). 3-HK does not affect the response to nerve stimulation nor the response to exogenous application of ATP or adenosine (N-ethylcarboxamidoadenosine). Our results suggest that acute administration of 3-HK modulates the responses of enteric smooth muscle to cholinergic and serotonergic stimuli.
