Cell surface sialic acid expression in human carcinoma of the gallbladder. Cell surface sialic acid expression in human carcinoma cells was compared to that in normal gallbladder and the carcinoma itself using a biotinylated lectin histochemical method. GSI-B4 (from Griffonia simplicifolia) had the highest affinity for the cell surface, with the highest reaction intensity. As a result, the carcinoma cells were positive, whereas the normal gallbladder wall was negative. GSI-B4-positive cells were preferentially observed at the lower tumour border. These results suggest that sialic acid expression on cell surfaces could be one of the characteristics distinguishing carcinoma from normal tissue.
