Murugadoss, and produced by Allirajah Subaskaran . .The present invention relates to a method for calling a universal telephone number to a receiving device, wherein, via a calling device, the received recipient number is transmitted to the calling device, the calling device is connected to the receiving device, and the called recipient number is displayed on the calling device. The invention also relates to a calling device which, on the basis of the recipient number, which is received from a calling device, initiates an interconnection with the receiving device. The digitisation and networking of new technical-functional applications which are provided or commissioned as products in the consumer market, in particular in the consumer electronics sector, also in the mobile telephony area, is considerably promoting the utilization of telephone numbers. In addition to the still customary telephone numbers which are assigned to consumers without any further terms of definition, for example subscriber numbers, these are increasingly frequently replaced with numbers, for example made available by the service provider, as telephone numbers of the respective applications, which make the telecommunication service and the service to be provided within the scope of a telecommunication network or a telecommunication service provider become readily accessible to the respective user. For the use of the respective numbers, it has been found to be useful if, after the connection of the calling device to the receiving device, the respective number is displayed on the calling device, so that the user of the calling device can easily call the receiving device, if it is not necessary to consider the telephone numbers of the respective telecommunication services or providers. Furthermore, the number of known numbers can be easily displayed on the calling device, and the number can be called in an easy and quick manner.
