2008 - 4:13pm.Q: Retrieving values from a list, then displaying in a different line I currently have a pretty simple project I'm working on to solve the first case of DeMorgan's laws. I am having trouble getting it to display the correct output of the expressions.
Currently, I have it displaying the desired answers (1 or 1), and the outputs I get are correct, but they just get printed on the same line. I would like it to be able to print in different lines for all the expressions. I'm new to coding and would greatly appreciate any help! I've tried using.split() to break the list in 2 different lines, but that didn't work.

string = '1+1-1+1+1' class Star(object): def __init__(self, text): if text[-1] == '*': self.text = text[:-1] else: self.text = text def __str__(self): return self.text def main(): strings = [] for i in range(1,5):
strings.append(Star('1') + '*' +
'1' + '*' + '1') for i in range(2

In an era where desktop computers have been replaced with mobile phones, laptops and tablets, the idea of a dual processor desktop is becoming less and less appealing. Mac OS X is no exception to this phenomenon, and with I/O to external monitors no longer an afterthought, Apple's internal USB-C adapter has made it almost impossible to build a truly portable Mac. That is, until Apple introduced Thunderbolt 3, and the very first Thunderbolt 3 external adapter, the new Mac Pro. The Mac Pro is meant to be a desktop computer on the go. You carry it in your bag, plug it into a power source and use it on the go. The internal graphics are split between two HD displays that can each be controlled independently, more than enough horsepower to run a single 4K display, and a large enough backlit keyboard to be usable for light to moderate usage.

Q: How can I make a jquery hover in a way that always returns to its previous state? I'm trying to make a jquery hover effect that will show the menu element of a navigation for only a second or two (for the purpose of this question, I don't need it to be fully functional, it's just for a demonstration) and then return it to its previous state. The button is a link with no href attribute.

$('.navigation').hover( function() {
$(this).find('.menuitem').show(); }, function() {
$(this).find('.menuitem').hide(); }, function(){ $(this).find('.menuitem').hide();
} );

When it shows, it displays fine. When it hides, it shows fine again. However, when I hover over the link, it will show and hide repeatedly (repeating the display/hide process indefinitely if that makes sense). I'm at a complete loss, and despite scrolling through all the answers on SO, I still don't have a solution. Any help would be appreciated. EDIT: I've got one semi-success, that will persist if I hover over the element again. The problem is that when I

This is especially true for libraries which serve the underserved. With the Library of Convenience, members of our community will be able to access a vast wealth of digital content, reviews, and resources via the internet 24/7. You will be able to research, connect with fellow community members and gain access to a diverse collection of products, services and public programs that will make your life just a little bit easier or enrich your outlook on the world. The Library of Convenience supports the research needs of all facets of Purdue's campus and the community. Its collection contains thousands of electronic, print and multimedia resources. Students, faculty, and staff are able to conduct research using the library's Special Collections, as well as books, journals, periodicals, microforms, newspapers, photographs, pamphlets, and more. Students are able to consult with librarians, review books for hire, and take advantage of current technology which includes a collaborative computer lab, an IT help desk, and a technology-equipped library and learning commons. Faculty and staff are able to take advantage of research time which is now extended to 75 hours. Additionally, this special collection provides for the preservation of documents and images. As a community-based organization, we understand the importance of developing a diverse collection. We want to bring the best to the people of Purdue in digital format, print, and microform. We encourage readers to use the Library of Convenience, and
