Nioh developer shares encounter with insomnia At DICE, it has been a tradition to have a panel before any of the previous titles in the franchise had shipped to allow the developers to talk about the game. Nioh creator Takashi Miyazawa has joined the panel for Nioh, where he revealed that he had an encounter with sleeplessness that resulted in him suffering a major hangover on the final day of development. It is also going to be the only game this franchise to be playable at E3. After the show, Miyazawa posted a thread to the official Japanese forum for the game, joking that he would not be allowed to talk about the game until he was allowed to be at E3. The date of his hangover is obviously November 3, 2019. I've been working for Nioh for around a year and a half. In the end, I'm the only dev there, so on the last day of development I was very exhausted. I could barely sleep that night. To be honest, I was so exhausted that I came in to work only to be told "You don't have to come in today, just go home and sleep." I was left alone all night and I didn't have the chance to spend any time with the team. I'm very sorry. I don't even remember what happened after that, but I definitely fell a sleep and even though I was sick I seemed to be able to understand what was going on around me. On the third day of my hangover,

Trying to access the Class property of a object from within a script tag. However, I am getting a TypeError. Any help appreciated. Thanks function doStuff() { var x = 0; //Attempt to access Class property alert(x.class); //TypeError: undefined is not a function } var myObject = new Class(); var myObject = new Class(0,0); A: The problem with your code is that you have created a new reference myObject, not the Class object itself. In the following code: function doStuff() { var x = 0; //Attempt to access Class property alert(x.class); //TypeError: undefined is not a function } var myObject = new Class(); var myObject = new Class(0,0); The two myObject references are actually different. The first myObject is a reference to the new Class object you have created, but it's not the Class object itself. The second myObject
