“When we were formulating the gameplay of FIFA 20 we looked at great football matches and analysed how ball possession changes over time,” said Jacob Minkoff, Senior Gameplay Producer on FIFA 22. “If you look at goals you’ll see a clear pattern. Initially the play is made out of possession, then suddenly we see aggressive play, which is then followed by more and more play being made from the opposition. It’s this progression we’ve embedded into the gameplay.” In FIFA 20 the ball shifted from player to player over the course of the match, but with FIFA 22 every player has a consistent amount of control over the ball. “The momentum of the game’s gameplay is in player control,” said Minkoff. “If I press a button, I can drive into the penalty area, whip in a flick-on, scissor a pass or stand off a defender. It’s a lot more intuitive.” The most important addition is “Premier Player Precision,” which increases the responsiveness of the ball as you dribble, pass or shoot. “If you were to come into the penalty area, there would be a big slow down of the motion of the ball,” said Minkoff. “That’s not the case. Now it feels like the ball is moving with your dribble – quicker. We’ve sped up the way we animate player movement in order to give the ball more agility.” In a game where the ball is in play for 86 percent of the time, FIFA fans will notice the rapid, fluid movement of the ball as it is moved by the player. “This is the essence of FIFA 22,” said Minkoff. Players now have their own personal touch the ball: physics. Players create a unique set of skills, which make them who they are in the game, yet also gave players a default skill set for their gameplay. So, for example, Fuego can pull-off spectacular acrobatic touches as well as adeptly dribble past players. Meanwhile, Adi balances speed and power with the ball, making him a deadly finisher. Witty, Eiður, in his exhibition debut, can weave through defenders with aplomb. Over the course of the game, players’ characters grow and
