. Since last week, the number of new coronavirus cases in Germany has stayed around the 2,000 mark. Last week, the federal government announced it would spend about 20 billion euros ($23 billion) to boost health services and social welfare. Some of the money will be spent on treatment and basic care for people suffering from the coronavirus. It will also be spent on contact tracing, testing and tracing people who have been exposed to the virus. In a televised address in front of a statue of Sigmund Freud, Health Minister Jens Spahn said that the federal government would boost funding for health. "Let me assure you that you as families and citizens will get the protection and care that you need," he told the public. Deutsche Welle: Hans-Georg Maaßen-Betriebszustand According to the latest published statistics, Germany has registered about 2,200 new cases of the virus, in a total of more than 42,000 infected people. So far, Germany has registered 3,428 deaths. At the same time, the number of deaths due to other causes has fallen by 53, recording at least 4,087 deaths. The number of deaths due to the coronavirus has risen sharply, from about 300 on February 24 to more than 1,200 on March 25. At the time of his announcement, Chancellor Angela Merkel and many other German politicians have expressed their concerns about the increasing number of deaths due to the coronavirus. Germany is currently facing a rapid rise in cases and deaths. Now the focus is also on the country's health care system. Last week, Chancellor Angela Merkel's chief of staff, Peter Altmaier, told the Bild newspaper newspaper that the initial goal of providing 100,000 intensive care beds and 3,000 hospital beds, as well as 8,000 beds for medical observation was not realistic. According to Spahn, the federal government is still working on the figure. "It is not about making a number up," he told the newspaper, adding that there are still some "surprises" ahead. "However, there will be additional 5,000 hospital beds. Let me stress again that the goal is still 1,000 hospital beds more. We are now at 36,000 hospital beds," he said. According to Spahn, around 500 of
