Ghatakhindi720pdownload 10 MayÂ . my experience was everything was working as it should, but once I rebooted, I was unable to reconnect, despite cancelling the reboot, and even restarting my network adapter and my computer. There were no file sharing processes running, so I decided to reboot again. While the network adapter did restart, the connection problem did not. At this point, I pulled out the cable and tried reconnecting once again, but this time I immediately got the message "Windows could not connect to the network". Without any idea of what might have caused this, I followed the exact steps for all of the important software, so I rebooted once again and the message was still there (This was the second time I had rebooted since I originally encountered the problem. Needless to say, I was becoming increasingly frustrated). Around this time, my computer's battery died, so I decided to wait until it charge before doing anything more. A few hours later, I got an email telling me I had a new power outlet and that the computer was connected to it, so I assumed everything was okay. Unfortunately, the problem was not solved. Upon inspection, I found that the antenna and TV adapter were not in their respective locations. I removed them from the unit, and plugged them back in, but to no avail. I restarted my computer. When I finally connected to my network, I tried to share files and get back on the internet but was again forced to switch off my computer. When I powered it back on, the same problem reoccurred. I removed all hardware connections, including the wireless adapter, the antennas, and the TV adapter, and connected to my network with my laptop. Everything worked as it should, but now I am unable to access my shared files, and I am forced to switch my computer off everytime the problem occurs. I don't know what's wrong, as I have done everything I can think of. I have even tried connecting to my neighbours' wireless router, but it's not working. Can anyone help me with my problem? Thank you very much for your time. I can give you any additional information if necessary. Sincerely, Gilad This experience would not happen to me. I know it's no use saying "go to your neighbor's place and try it out" but I'm not a technical expert by any means and it would really be a pain if I had to go to my neighbors. This has happened
