Stating a comma before a long dash wouldn't work because the dash would be treated as part of the dash-alike; it would be like writing the address, Windsor, ON, K1X 8D7 and getting Windsor, K1X8D7, which is not what you want. Instead, remove the dash and make it an em dash instead, then the comma will work. Like this: ...kelk2013softwarefree16... If you want to learn about multiple ways of handling strings in R, try strptime. You might also find the "Fuzzy matching" section of?regex help interesting. You could also always look at existing code samples and see what sorts of methods you might be able to adapt to your own needs. You can read more about the mechanics of how regular expression matching works in?regex. Finally, you can look into using strings like your example in a date format like this: formattedDate Version 1.0.0 of the parser and interpreter is almost complete. We do not have the Acorn2.0 Ast node yet, but I expect it to be ready soon. And we have had people talking about the json parser implementation for jsLint and coffeeint for a while now. Version 0.9.2 The class configuration file and the parser implementation are now in a first stage of completion. We fixed a couple of compilation issues. First we no longer have problems when parsing enumerable types and nullable types with switch. Second, we have some new compiler errors if you are compiling to strict mode without calling yclass:statements. Version 0.8.0 mists release 2.9 mists release 2.9 a) General This release introduces a configurable and extensible parser implementation, as well as some classes for handling lexing and parsing. the
